MANAGERS
PROBATION
GUIDANCE

PROFESSIONAL SERVICES
This guidance supplements the University’s Probation Policy, providing additional guidance on what needs to be done and when. It is important above all that individuals are supported through their probationary period to ensure a solid basis for a successful career at the University.

The probation period should be a positive, productive time in which the new employee learns about both the University and their role. “Welcome to Essex” on the Moodle site contains a number of useful links on the key areas a new employee needs to know in their first year.

THE KEY STAGES OF PROBATION ARE:

- Induction, which includes Essential Training.
- If a probation agreement is being used, this needs to be discussed and agreed with the line manager within the first two weeks.
- Midway through probation, at 3 or 6 months, there should be a review of how the role is going, whether any guidance or support is needed. Any concerns should be flagged at this point.
- At the end of probation, the line manager should meet with the employee and review the probation period.

“Probation is the time when we welcome new members to the University, ensure they settle in well and help them gain the understanding and experience to succeed in their roles.

The way we provide support and guidance in those first days and months and throughout the probation period is an important investment for the future. Our new colleagues need to understand what is expected of them and how we do things at the University and have the opportunity to demonstrate how they are growing into their new roles. With our assistance, they will be able to make the best start to their career at Essex.”

WHY IS PROBATION SO IMPORTANT?

At The University of Essex we have people, communities and knowledge at our core and this is reflected in our probation approach. Probation is a key time for both employer and employee and therefore it is vital that it’s managed correctly to ensure both parties benefit. Probation is a period when employees are finding their way and learning their new role. They will also be forming their opinion of their new employer. Probation is a great time to offer new employees support and to identify any training needs.

It is important for managers to meet regularly with their new employee so that they can understand the progress they are making. Setting initial goals and documenting progress can really help both parties to clarify expectations. You should always highlight to the new employee at the earliest opportunity if there are any problems and allow them time to improve. Populating a probation agreement can help with this.

If you have any concerns about your new employee you should keep a written record and flag your concerns as early as possible. It is also important to encourage your new employee to flag or record any areas of concern they may have during their probation period. Probation is very much a two way process, behaviours as well as ability must be considered. It is no good having a team member who achieves all of their objectives but behaves inappropriately as this does not reflect our values.

THE ROLE OF THE LINE MANAGER

Line managers play a crucial role in welcoming new employees to the University and ensuring they make the best possible start. Most importantly, line managers must ensure that new employees are receiving the support and guidance they need. This starts with a full induction, followed by regular meetings to review progress and provide support.

It is important for the line manager to be fully prepared for the arrival of their new employee. A ‘Checklist for Managers’ highlights everything the line manager should do before, during and after the employee’s arrival. This includes, planning an induction programme and having a main point of contact. On their first day the new employee should:

- Have the induction and probation process explained to them
- Be given the tools to carry out their role
- Shown around the campus/office/workplace etc,
- Introduced to fellow work colleagues
- Shown how to access relevant systems (HR Organiser/ Moodle etc)

When the new employee starts in their new role their line manager should explain the requirements of the role, how they can make the best start (who to meet, what to read etc) and any development objectives. If appropriate the new employee may benefit from a ‘buddy’ or a ‘mentor’ while they are settling into the department.

This should be arranged by the line manager. During induction, line managers must ensure the new employee has completed all essential training which can be accessed on the Moodle site. Essential training is mandatory to all roles, as the University has a duty of care to new employees. There should be regular communication between the line manager and the new employee, ideally once a fortnight.

The mid-point meeting is a particularly important time to reflect on progress and learning. Mid-point occurs at 3 months for a 6 month probation, and 6 months for a 12 month probation. If line managers have any concerns, it is really important that these are raised openly and honestly at this point. This will ensure that the new employee has enough time to get back on track and be given additional support.

THE ROLE OF THE NEW EMPLOYEE

New employees need to play an active role in order to get the most out of their probation. This means:

- Ensuring they understand the requirements of the role and seek guidance where they are not clear.
- Attending regular meetings with their line manager and playing an active role in them.
- Taking responsibility for their personal development.
- Being open to feedback and coaching
- Raising any problems and seeking support where needed.
- Ensuring that essential training is completed in good time.

The new employee must own their Probation Agreement and make sure they are actively looking to complete their objectives.

THE ROLE OF HUMAN RESOURCES

Human Resources is there to support line managers and new starters to get the best out of the probation period.

Human Resources initially send through contractual information to the new employees before they start. This will include information around the length of their probation period and the University’s induction programme.

HR can support the manager in tackling any issues around performance and development. It is always best to involve HR at an early stage – this does not mean that a formal process will be followed but they can help support you to get things back on track. HR is able to provide a range of professional development opportunities that can also help. If a probation agreement is not in place, it might be good to introduce one.

Once the line manager is happy to confirm probation they must contact Human Resources so that a confirmation of permanency letter can be sent through to the individual.

In those rare cases where the individual fails to improve, this may lead to either an extension of their probation period or non-confirmation of probation. Human Resources will help guide the line manager and the individual through this process.

THE STAGES OF PROBATION

The key stages of probation are:

- Induction.
- If a probation agreement is being used, this needs to be discussed and agreed with the line manager within the first two weeks.
- Midway through probation, at 3 or 6 months, the agreement is reviewed with their line manager. Any issues should be flagged at this point and support offered.
- At the end of probation, the line manager should meet with the employee and review the probation period and, if used, their Probation Agreement.

At the end of the probation process, the line manager needs to inform HR if the employee has passed through probation or if they have any concerns around the employees performance these should have been raised earlier in the process.

Templates are available to download and populate within the Probation webpage. Always ensure you are using the current version. Populated templates are also available to act as guides when completing. [add links]
INDUCTION

Induction is a crucial time to ensure that new starters have all the essential information and training they need. Line managers must ensure the new employee has completed all essential training within 6 months, which can be accessed on the [Moodle link]. New employees are also invited to a series of 6 monthly induction events which are repeated on a rolling basis. Each event offers an insight into a different department within the University enabling the new employee to gain a vital overall operational understanding. The events also offer an opportunity to meet colleagues who are also new to working at Essex. The invitations to these events are sent directly by Organisational Development and can be booked through HR Organiser.

THE PROBATION AGREEMENT

The Probation Agreement is a record of the expectations and objectives set out by the line manager and discussed with the new employee. They are not required but can be a useful tool to ensure that the new starter is clear about what is expected of them.

The Agreement has two parts:
- Objectives for the role.
- Identified training and development activities to support the individual in their new role.

Both parts of the agreement should be completed within the first 2 weeks of appointment so that it can be most useful.

The Probation Agreement and the milestones within it should be signed off by the line manager, in collaboration with HR.

Following the final review, the Probation Agreement can be taken forward as the basis of the employee’s ongoing development plan.

FINAL REVIEW

The final review happens at the end of the Probation Period and allows the line manager and new employee to reflect on the past 6 or 12 month period and what has been achieved. The Probation Agreement will help both parties to do this in a structured way. If any issues arise it is important to try and resolve them informally in the first instance. If this is not possible they must be flagged to HR at the earliest opportunity – who can provide support and guidance.

In exceptional circumstances it may be felt that the probation period should be extended. This should not happen as a matter of course and would need to be agreed by a senior manager, in collaboration with HR.

Following the final review, the Probation Agreement can be taken forward as the basis of the employee’s ongoing development plan.

TOP TIPS FOR GIVING FEEDBACK,

- Make sure the recipient is prepared
- Try to give the feedback in a timely manner while it is still fresh
- Don’t give feedback in a public place or in front of others
- Focus on helping to improve performance
- Demonstrate the behaviour you wish to see
- Don’t focus on personality or personal comments
- Vary your style according to the needs of the individual
- Recognise the positives as well as negatives
- Don’t make assumptions
- Don’t argue with or ignore the recipient
- Don’t dwell on the past without looking at the future
- Ask for feedback on the way you handled the session
- Look to continuously improve

TOP TIPS FOR MAKING THE MOST OF A PROBATION PERIOD

Make sure you meet your new employee regularly.

All managers are very busy with business as usual, but before you know it the probation period will have ended and you may not have spent enough time with your new employee. If you have not spent the time with them how will you know if they are settling into their role? Commit to meeting regularly from day one.

Training and Development. Take advantage of the probation period to train, develop and monitor your new employee. At the end of the probation period your new employee can then be ready to hit the ground running and excel in their new role.

Two way feedback. It is really important for feedback to be a two way process, as well as identifying how well the new staff member is fitting into their new role, it is important to find out what the employee thinks of their new role. It is important to find out if it meets their expectations and what they were promised at interview. Are they happy with their induction? What additional training would they like to have?

Be Sure. If you are not 100% sure your new employee is the right fit for the culture of your organization or if you have concerns around their ability to carry out the job beyond the intervention of training and development it is crucial not to sign off their probation period. If required it is better to extend the probation period.

Share experience. It is important to make a good impression on your new employee by telling them about the University’s strategy, vision and values. It is vital you help and support a new employee understand the bigger picture and the important part they have to play. If a new employee has a bad initial experience they are likely to carry it with them throughout their career at the University.

ONCE PROBATION IS COMPLETED...

The reflection, learning, feedback and achievements of the probation period can be taken forward once permanency has been achieved.

- A development log can be created to assist with this.
- A mentor may also help with development and achieving the next set of goals.
- The performance review process will also provide an opportunity to have time with your line manager for feedback and reflection.

- Once the appointment has been confirmed set up regular 121’s and agree an ongoing development plan
ANNEX 4
GETTING THE MOST OUT OF YOUR MEETING

BEFORE THE MEETING
- Organise a suitable private room
- Ensure the individual is aware of the date/time/room
- Ensure the individual understands the purpose of the meeting and areas to be discussed
- Ensure the correct, most up to date documentation is being used from the probation online toolkit
- Review the appropriate documents (Probation Agreement, Development Plan)
- Consider examples against the objectives on the Probation Agreement
- Consider skills and behavioural strengths. Are there any gaps?
- Gather feedback from colleagues who have worked with the individual

DURING THE MEETING
- Welcome the individual
- Clarify the reason for the meeting and the desired outputs
- Ask the individual to talk through their objectives and how they feel their probation has gone
- Manager needs to give structured feedback against objectives
- Look at areas to feed into the new development plan
- Consider the available courses on HR Organiser
- Check how both parties feel the meeting went
- Agree frequency of 1:1's coaching sessions going forward
- Discuss the possibility of a Mentor

AFTER THE MEETING
- Ensure a copy of the completed Probation Agreement is shared with HR so that if successful a letter can be sent confirming permanency to the individual
- If unsuccessful refer to the probation policy and contact HR to consider next steps
- Ensure regular 1:1’s and future coaching sessions are booked
- Ensure a development plan is completed
- Look at appointing a mentor if it would be beneficial for the individual and they are in agreement

ANNEX 5
FEEDBACK IS A KEY TOOL IN DEVELOPING OTHERS

FEEDBACK CAN BE HANDLED IN TWO WAYS:

1. IT CAN BE TOLD
   - e.g. When you were presenting at the meeting yesterday you failed to mention that we had increased the deadline for the activity
   - Good for quick, short, effective feedback between two people who have high levels of trust and respect
   - Effective fall-back if the employee is unable to identify the feedback area for themselves
   - Can lead to low levels of motivation

   DO
   - Check your motivation for giving feedback
   - Give feedback as soon as possible
   - Make sure the recipient is prepared
   - Demonstrate the behaviour you wish to see
   - Recognise the positives as well as negatives
   - Make your discussion’s two-way; ask questions, check reactions
   - Very style according to needs of individual and situation
   - Focus on helping to improve performance
   - Ask for feedback on the way you handled the session

   DON’T
   - Ignore the recipient’s comments
   - Make assumptions
   - Argue
   - Promise what you can’t deliver
   - Focus on personality or personal comments
   - Discuss people’s performance in public, with them or others
   - Avoid giving any of the ‘bad news’
   - Get caught up with destructive criticism
   - Dwell on the past without thinking about future opportunities

2. …OR IT CAN BE CONSULTED
   - e.g. How do you think the presentation went yesterday? Do you think you covered all the key information?
   - Great for motivation levels and “buy-in”
   - Increases likelihood that behaviour will change / be reinforced
   - Much easier for all concerned with “difficult” areas
   - Is likely to take considerably longer

A BLEND OF THE TWO IS THE MOST NATURAL APPROACH
