Biography
Andrew Canessa is a social anthropologist and has been with the University of Essex since 1989. Much of his career has been spent working with indigenous peoples of Latin America, and he has conducted long term field work (25 years) in an Aymara speaking community of highland Bolivia. His research interests are ethnic and racial identities, gender, sexuality, indigenous mobilisations and postcolonial scholarship (e.g. Intimate Indigeneities: Race, Sex and History in the Small Spaces of Andean Life Duke University Press.). His work is published widely in Spanish as well as English as he seeks to ensure his research is disseminated to non English speakers, especially in Latin America. He also enjoys collaborating with Latin American scholars and edited a volume with Aida Hernández Género, complementariedades y exclusiones en Mesoamérica y los Andes published by the UN through IWGIA, bringing together scholars from across the continent.. His current project is an ESRC funded oral history project looking at changing Gibraltarian identities in the 20th century. The outputs current include several articles as well as two book contracts and the project has enjoyed considerable media interest.

Biography

Nancy Kula studied for her PhD (2002) at the University of Leiden in the Netherlands working on phonology – an investigation of sound systems – in sub-Saharan Bantu languages. She then won a 3-year post-doc award from the Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research which she held jointly at the Leiden Centre for Linguistics and SOAS, University of London, from 2004 to 2006. In September 2007 she joined the Department of Language and Linguistics at Essex as Lecturer in Linguistics and became Senior Lecturer in 2013. Her research is both theoretical and descriptive. Theoretically she aims to contribute to a better understanding of the universal principles that underpin cognitive linguistic function, by testing hypotheses against empirical evidence through descriptive work conducted on Bantu languages. She has worked in different field sites including Malawi, Tanzania and Zambia. Her work also focuses on endangered languages where she looks at relatively less well-described Bantu languages, such as Mbowe and Mwenyi spoken in Western Zambia (research funded by the Endangered Languages Project 2012-13). She has published her work in many international journals and is co-editor of The Continuum Companion to Phonology (2011/2013).

In the department of Language and Linguistics she is involved in the teaching of Phonetics and Phonology. She held the role of Undergraduate Admissions selector for Linguistics from 2009 to 2014 and is involved in recruitment and conversion initiatives.
